Hot off the Presses!! DALA RETURNS WITH THE BIG BANG

This is their first studio album in 14 years and it is a striking leap forward for the folk duo. The growth, artistically and personally, as well as the undeniable joy of two musicians fully embracing who they are today.

The Big Bang, recorded at Union Sound in Toronto, was created live off the studio floor with songs captured in single, complete takes. Produced by Sheila Carabine and Amanda Walther (aka DALA), the album marks a new creative chapter for the Canadian duo. Their one of a kind, instinctive musical connection, built over more than two decades of singing together has never been more apparent.

Sitting cross legged on the studio floor Dala managed to capture the magic that has come to define their live shows. Without separating their voices or overworking the performances, they embraced the natural movement, dynamics and imperfections that make their music feel so alive. With their signature harmonies front and centre, every breath, every subtle shift, and every moment of their musical conversation remains intact and ready for the listener to discover.

The result is Dala's most fearless and honest album to date. At a moment when music can be endlessly refined and reshaped, The Big Bang celebrates the beauty and immediacy of genuine human connection and creation; a record that reflects exactly who Sheila and Amanda are as singers, songwriters, and friends.

After years of touring, writing, and navigating life's many changes side by side, the bond between these two best friends can be heard woven into every song. The album carries deeply personal reflections on love, friendship, resilience, and the defiant hope for beauty in an uncertain world. Rather than turning away from difficult times, Amanda and Sheila meet them with warmth, wisdom, joy, and the vulnerability of a partnership that is stronger than ever.

The Big Bang is the sound of two artists trusting their voices, trusting each other, and discovering that after all these years, they are just getting started.
